The 2019 GMC Terrain offers a range of options, making it appealing at higher trim levels. While the base model may not offer some of the active safety features that come standard in its competitors, upgrading to higher trim levels unlocks a plethora of desirable features. The price difference between the base and well-equipped models can be significant, but it allows for a more personalized and fully-loaded experience. Shoppers looking for a small SUV with towing capabilities and a touch of luxury will find the GMC Terrain to be a unique offering in its class.

The 2019 GMC Terrain offers three engine options. The largest turbocharged version provides lively performance, while the standard engine and available diesel are less energetic. Towing capacity ranges from 1500 to 3500 pounds based on the engine choice. The Terrain provides a comfortable ride but lacks driver engagement on twisty roads. The steering is direct but lacks feedback.

Its infotainment system is user-friendly, and it boasts a comfortable ride and a spacious cabin. Additionally, the Terrain offers features that are rare for its class, such as wireless device charging and heated rear seats. It underwent a complete redesign, trading the previous generation's blocky styling for a sleeker and more polarizing appearance. On the road, the Terrain prioritizes comfort and delivers a refined driving experience reminiscent of luxury vehicles.
