2019 Honda CR-V Loss in Value Case Study

Tuesday, February 14, 2023

Almost every car buyer's list in this increasingly popular segment includes the 2019 CR-V. With a large cargo area, ample rear seat room, easy access to LATCH anchors, and clever storage solutions, it makes family life easier. It's also safe. The crash test ratings are flawless, and accident-avoidance technologies are standard on all but the base trim.

In spite of its comfortable ride and quiet cabin, the 2019 CR-V responds well to inputs and handles well. Its turbocharged engine, available in most trim levels, provides best-in-class acceleration and fuel economy. It also has a solid reputation for reliability and resale value.

The base four-cylinder engine is less responsive but provides smooth operation. The CR-V's first turbocharged engine is paired with one of the best continuously variable automatic transmissions (CVTs) available.

The CR-V makes a convincing case through its integrated smartphone features and advanced safety features, which come as standard on most versions. However, the entertainment system and voice controls can be quite cumbersome. Fortunately, if you connect your smartphone, the support is total with most trims offering Android Auto and Apple CarPlay compatibility – except for the base LX version. Similarly, models excluding the LX trim feature lane keeping assist, adaptive cruise control, blind-spot monitoring, forward collision warning, and automatic emergency braking technology all rolled into one. It's worth noting that collision warnings may give a few false positives in highly populated urban areas – but then again these systems can also be deactivated altogether.
