2021 Ford Expedition Loss in Value Case Study

Tuesday, August 01, 2023

Introducing the 2021 Ford Expedition, a true embodiment of the classic three-row SUV with rugged body-on-frame construction and a four-wheel-drive system, ready to conquer rocky terrains with ease. As the largest SUV in Ford's lineup, it outshines its competitors, including the recently redesigned Ford Explorer.

Since its 2018 launch, this Expedition generation has been a significant upgrade, impressing with its spaciousness and comfort, especially when choosing the extended Expedition Max option. Ford has added a new base trim and expanded the list of optional features for the 2021 model year, enhancing its appeal even further.

The 2021 Ford Expedition caters to active families, boasting room for up to eight passengers and ample cargo space, making it an ideal workhorse. Equipped with a twin-turbocharged V-6 engine and a 10-speed automatic transmission, it offers robust towing capacity and a smooth ride. Although not exhilarating to drive, the Expedition's composed handling for its size compensates for that.

Under the hood, the twin-turbo V6 engine provides ample muscle, rivaling even V8-powered competitors. The driving experience might not be thrilling, but its performance score ranks among the best in its class, assuring top-notch capability.

In the realm of large SUVs, the Ford Expedition remains unparalleled, despite the competition from the redesigned Chevrolet Tahoe and Suburban, which fall short, especially on the interior front. Other alternatives include the Nissan Armada and the aging Toyota Sequoia, but they fail to match the Expedition's prowess.
