The Honda Accord is one of the top cars for family use, thanks to its generous cargo and passenger space, high safety and reliability ratings, favorable reviews from automotive journalists, and several family-focused features. It is also highly praised for its two powerful engine options, responsive control, and comfortable ride. The interior of the Accord is one of the finest in the mid-sized car category and both rows of seats provide excellent support for passengers. Additionally, it has a roomy trunk and an easily navigable infotainment system.

With 192 horsepower from a 1.5-liter turbocharged four-cylinder and 252 horsepower from a 2.0-liter turbocharged four-cylinder, the lineup is topped by a 10-speed automatic transmission that shifts almost seamlessly. While both engines are smooth operators, the 2.0-liter offers a rush of power that can easily spin the front tires in first gear.

Despite being light, the steering is accurate and predictable, as befits a car in this class. While the Accord's ride is firmly controlled, it never feels harsh, which makes it a great combination of a sports sedan and a practical family vehicle.

In addition to an 8.0-inch touchscreen infotainment display, all models come with Bluetooth and USB connectivity. Apple CarPlay and Android Auto capabilities are also available. Even low-tech folks will find it intuitive to use; the system is quick, attractive, and easy to use.
