2021 Hyundai Tucson Loss in Value Case Study

Tuesday, April 04, 2023

With the abundance of small SUVs in the current market, selecting the most suitable one can be challenging. Despite being overshadowed by the Honda CR-V and Mazda CX-5, the Hyundai Tucson is a practical option, boasting a superb infotainment system, comfortable driving experience, and spacious interior. Moreover, it's a budget-friendly choice, costing significantly less than its comparably equipped competitors, making it an attractive option for those seeking a competitive small SUV at an affordable price point.

However, Tucson's engine performance could be improved. Neither of its four-cylinder engines is particularly powerful or fuel-efficient, but they are capable of handling most everyday drives.

The 2021 Hyundai Tucson is available with two engine options: a 161-horsepower 2.0-liter four-cylinder and a larger 181-horsepower 2.4-liter four-cylinder with a fuel-economy estimate rated at 25 mpg (22 city/28 highway). An automatic transmission and front-wheel drive are standard. All-wheel drive is optional.

There is a 7.0-inch touchscreen with Apple CarPlay and Android Auto as standard, and an 8.0-inch touchscreen with in-dash navigation is available on the Limited and Ultimate trim levels. A powerful multi-channel audio system from Infinity is available, as are smart advanced driving aids and an intuitive navigation system. Drawbacks include a small touchscreen with dated graphics, but even this is a minor issue.
