The 2022 Hyundai Sonata offers an enticing blend of style, value, and performance options. This family sedan boasts a diverse lineup, ranging from well-equipped entry-level trims to efficient hybrids and a sporty N Line model. While the N Line's 290-horsepower turbo-four engine and sporty suspension add excitement to your drive, other Sonatas prioritize comfort and tech.

Hyundai's Sonata made a bold statement with its 2020 redesign, injecting avant-garde style into the sedan segment. In 2021, the N Line variant further amped up performance, setting a new standard for midsize sport sedans. For 2022, updates include the standardization of the Tech package on the SEL Plus trim, known for its value-packed features. Additionally, the N Line introduces the Night Edition, featuring a striking blend of matte and gloss black exterior finishes and carbon-fiber trim accents.

In terms of quality, the Sonata shines. While its powertrains may not deliver thrilling performance across the board, the N Line's turbo-four stands out. The cabin is a highlight, offering a premium feel with spacious, supportive seats. The trunk space is generous, and the user-friendly infotainment system enhances the overall driving experience. With good fuel efficiency and few flaws, the Hyundai Sonata competes admirably in the midsize sedan class, rivaling the Honda Accord, Kia K5, and Nissan Altima.
